The Master of Science in Community Health Education Program is designed to prepare individuals for employment in community health agencies, to administer and develop health education programs, to implement health education processes and concepts. Candidates are encouraged to tailor coursework to their particular interests and the health issues specific to their professional responsibilities. This is a non-thesis degree in which a student completes a four-credit “Graduate Project in Health Education” (HED 798) related to a focused health education health promotion issue.

Students must complete individually prescribed undergraduate course work to meet prerequisite requirements. Graduate students from other programs are not allowed to enroll in community health program graduate courses unless departmental approval has been given. Graduate credit will not be awarded for any course in which undergraduate credit was received.
