POL 347 Cr.3
Peace and Conflict
This course provides an overview of the scientific study of peace and conflict. How do various types of conflict such as inter-state war, civil war, terrorism, genocide, repression, and nonviolence differ from each other, and what do we know about trends in these types of conflict? Why do countries go to war with each other? Why do civil wars break out? What causes ethnic groups to rebel against their governments? What can be done to resolve these types of conflicts and prevent their recurrence? These are just some of the questions we will examine in this course. To do so, we will explore definitions, data, and trends in various types of conflict, as well as theories about the causes, termination, and resolution of various types of conflict. In the process, students will develop a better understanding of foundational and emerging research in the field of conflict studies that will enable them to make sense of various types of conflict worldwide. Prerequisite: POL 234 or POL 244 or junior standing. Offered Spring.

POL 377 Cr.3

Constitutional Law VIII: 1787 and Original Intent
The central inquiry in Constitutional Law, and the question which most guides the U.S. Supreme Court, is whether the intentions of the Framers of 1787 should exclusively direct justices in interpreting constitutional provisions, or if it is necessary to adjudicate cases in light of changing legal and social circumstances not known to members of the Philadelphia Convention. We will begin with a study of the 1787 Convention and then read a series of law review articles advocating both of these perspectives. Supreme Court opinions will not be covered in this course. Prerequisite: POL 370 or POL 371 or POL 372 or POL 373 or POL 374 or POL 375 or POL 376. Offered Occasionally.
