The Department of Health Professions at UWL offers six exciting fully-accredited healthcare education programs. These programs are:

- Medical Dosimetry (http://catalog.uwlax.edu/graduate/programrequirements/medicaldosimetry) (DOS - master's level),
- Nuclear Medicine Technology (http://catalog.uwlax.edu/undergraduate/nuclearmedicinetechnology) (NMT - bachelor's level),

- Physician Assistant (http://catalog.uwlax.edu/graduate/programrequirements/physicianassistant) (PAS - master's level), and
- Radiation Therapy (http://catalog.uwlax.edu/undergraduate/radiationtherapy) (RT - bachelor's level).

These programs have achieved regional and national recognition for excellence in professional health care education, and the placement rate of our graduating students approaches 100%.

Each of these programs has an identified professional curriculum including both didactic and clinical experiences which leads to a degree. Each program has defined pre-professional prerequisite and admission criteria, which must be completed before seeking admission to the professional program. UWL students interested in one of these fields will declare that discipline as a pre-professional second major (e.g. pre-OT) prior to making formal application to that program. Students interested in transferring to UWL to enroll in a health professions program should consult that program for advice regarding transfer. Student participation in each program is governed by program specific policies that can be obtained directly from the program.

Each of the Health Professions Department programs requires students to have a criminal background check prior to beginning professional course work. These are required by health care institutions that students will be attending during their program. Unacceptable criminal background checks may jeopardize the student’s ability to complete their professional program. Further information about the criminal background check is available on each program’s website.
